

Buses to Stop Harbor City Run

Questioning whether it had any jurisdiction in the matter of stopping the Torrance bus runs in the Harbor City-Harbor Hills area, the Board of Public Utilities last week asked the Los Angeles City Attorney to advise them of their rights in the matter, according to Marshall Chamberlain, superintendent of buses.

Asked by residents of the neighboring area to look into the situation, members of the board admitted frankly at its Tuesday meeting that they doubted if there was any course of action open to them.

Meanwhile, representatives have been busy here with their protests about the proposed curtailment of service to that area.

MERCHANTS COLLARED

Torrance merchants were drawn into the controversy over the proposed curtailment of bus service to the Harbor City-Harbor Hills area last week when a delegation from those areas made a surprise visit to a regularly called meeting of the board of directors.

Coming into the meeting unannounced, the delegation sought to have the local merchants back their fight to halt the plan to discontinue bus service in their area next Sunday.

Chairman John Almond, of the

Evangelistic Night Meetings To Start Sunday

A week long series of evangelistic meetings will be held in the Church of Christ beginning this Sunday evening, according to Raymond Putnam, minister.

Speaker will be J. E. Wainwright of El Segundo.

The meetings will begin at 7:30 each evening starting September 10 and will continue through September 17.

Congregational singing led by R. G. Himes, song director will be a part of each meeting.

merchants' association, called a special meeting for last week to hear the delegates.

A. E. Backman, representing Harbor City Chamber of Commerce, and Mrs. J. A. Hencel told the Monday gathering that halting Torrance buses from making their run through their community would leave them stranded.

"It would isolate us completely," Backman said. "It affects not only us, but you as well," he said.

Quoting from a survey which he said was conducted by Mrs. Hencel, Backman said that two out of three families in the area were dependent in one way or another on the Torrance bus.

SUPERINTENDENT DISAGREES

This contrasted sharply with the statement by Chamberlain, bus superintendent, that the line averaged about three passengers per trip except during school days when the children rode to and from school on the bus.

Chamberlain said the line, which was started early during World War II, had been a money-loser for the past eight years.

Mayor Bob Haggard, who was attending the meeting at the request of the merchants, told the Harbor City representatives that we had many people in Torrance who were farther from bus lines than Harbor City—and that the Torrance residents were supporting the buses with taxes.

"We should service our own people, even at a loss, before operating out-of-town lines at a loss," the Mayor said.

The meeting adjourned without reaching any conclusions, after Chairman John Almond told Backman and Mrs. Hencel that their only possible action would be to recommend to the council that the suspension of service be postponed.

In the meantime, the plans for stopping the run Sunday are still in effect.

COAL BEGINING

Because of transportation difficulties, bituminous coal was not profitably marketed in the U. S. until about 1820.
